Moments

I open the box of life. I find moments. They are hidden in the past, present, and future. They echo in empty houses, crowded classrooms, and in the shades of eternity. They vary in vivid colors painting the kaleidascope of life. Each moment is an interlude. I can hear them playing lonely melodies, which outline the music of life – a sweet music, only to be heard by open ears. Even I must kneel low to hear the whispers of these moments. I reach for happy moments, but many seem to wither like the first flowers of spring. These moments are forming a pattern – the pattern of man's existence. I can see moments which bring pain, moments which bring love, and moments which bring peace. There are moments which form the pastels of happiness and the bleak grays of loneliness. There are small moments which bring forth beauty and minute entities which constitute reality. I can see rich golden moments, moments that are warm, moments that will shine in the dark corners of life. There are moments that which are tinted with sorrow. They are cold, like steel, glinting in an empty darkness. Each moment I find dons its own identity. Each is individualistic – composed of priceless elements like the touch of a child's hand, the hollows of blank eyes, the hovering trees of loneliness. These moments I find are the byways to man's heart – they are the keys to man's existence. They contain that certain essence which fills the box of life and personifies its value. I reach into this box and I can see that special moment – that priceless moment which completes my life and touches the flowing veins of God. I shall close the box of life only to find the golden moment of my eternity.

The Philosopher And The Child

The moonlight streaming

Down through the trees

Draws crazy patterns on the street

As the cobblestones rattle

At each step I take

And the trees bend

To hear my tale of life

They listen quietly

And offer no insults or curses

When we do not agree

Instead they whisper the truths

Learned in their years to replace

Envy with Praise

Conceit with Selflessness

Hate with Love

Their years have been spent

In giving not taking

And they have placed it

As their greatest freedom

And I stood humbled

In the presence of this plant

That was beneath me

I was so little that I had to stand on tiptoe to reach the tabletop.

I cherished a baby doll and longed for a bicycle.

I cried so terribly and wished the world would end.

I remembered all those moments and smiled . . .

I slowly walk down the path.

I sense a rebirth,

Hesitate – turn around.

While facing yesterday

I encounter memories.

Crying for the unrestorable

I unsuccessfully try to reach for the unreachable

I attempt to regain that which is lost.

Yet, in the dim light of dawn,

I optimistically search for a faint ray of hope.

Behind me I see a world of yesterdays,

But before me a Path of Gold.

I stumble onward, driven by hope,

Living for the moment

Because . . . .

What is life if not but a joining of many different moments to make one,

Different Man?

STEEL VALLEY
SVT
STEEL VALLEY

When one day we are faced

With the realization of reality,

We will cry out and say,

That once we were young.

Moments that I touched,

(Or did they touch me?)

Cannot be counted

By saying one, two, three.

Happy moments that I've had,

I cannot pick just one,

It's all the moments in my life,

That make it so much fun.

A moment is shorter than a second and longer than a lifetime.

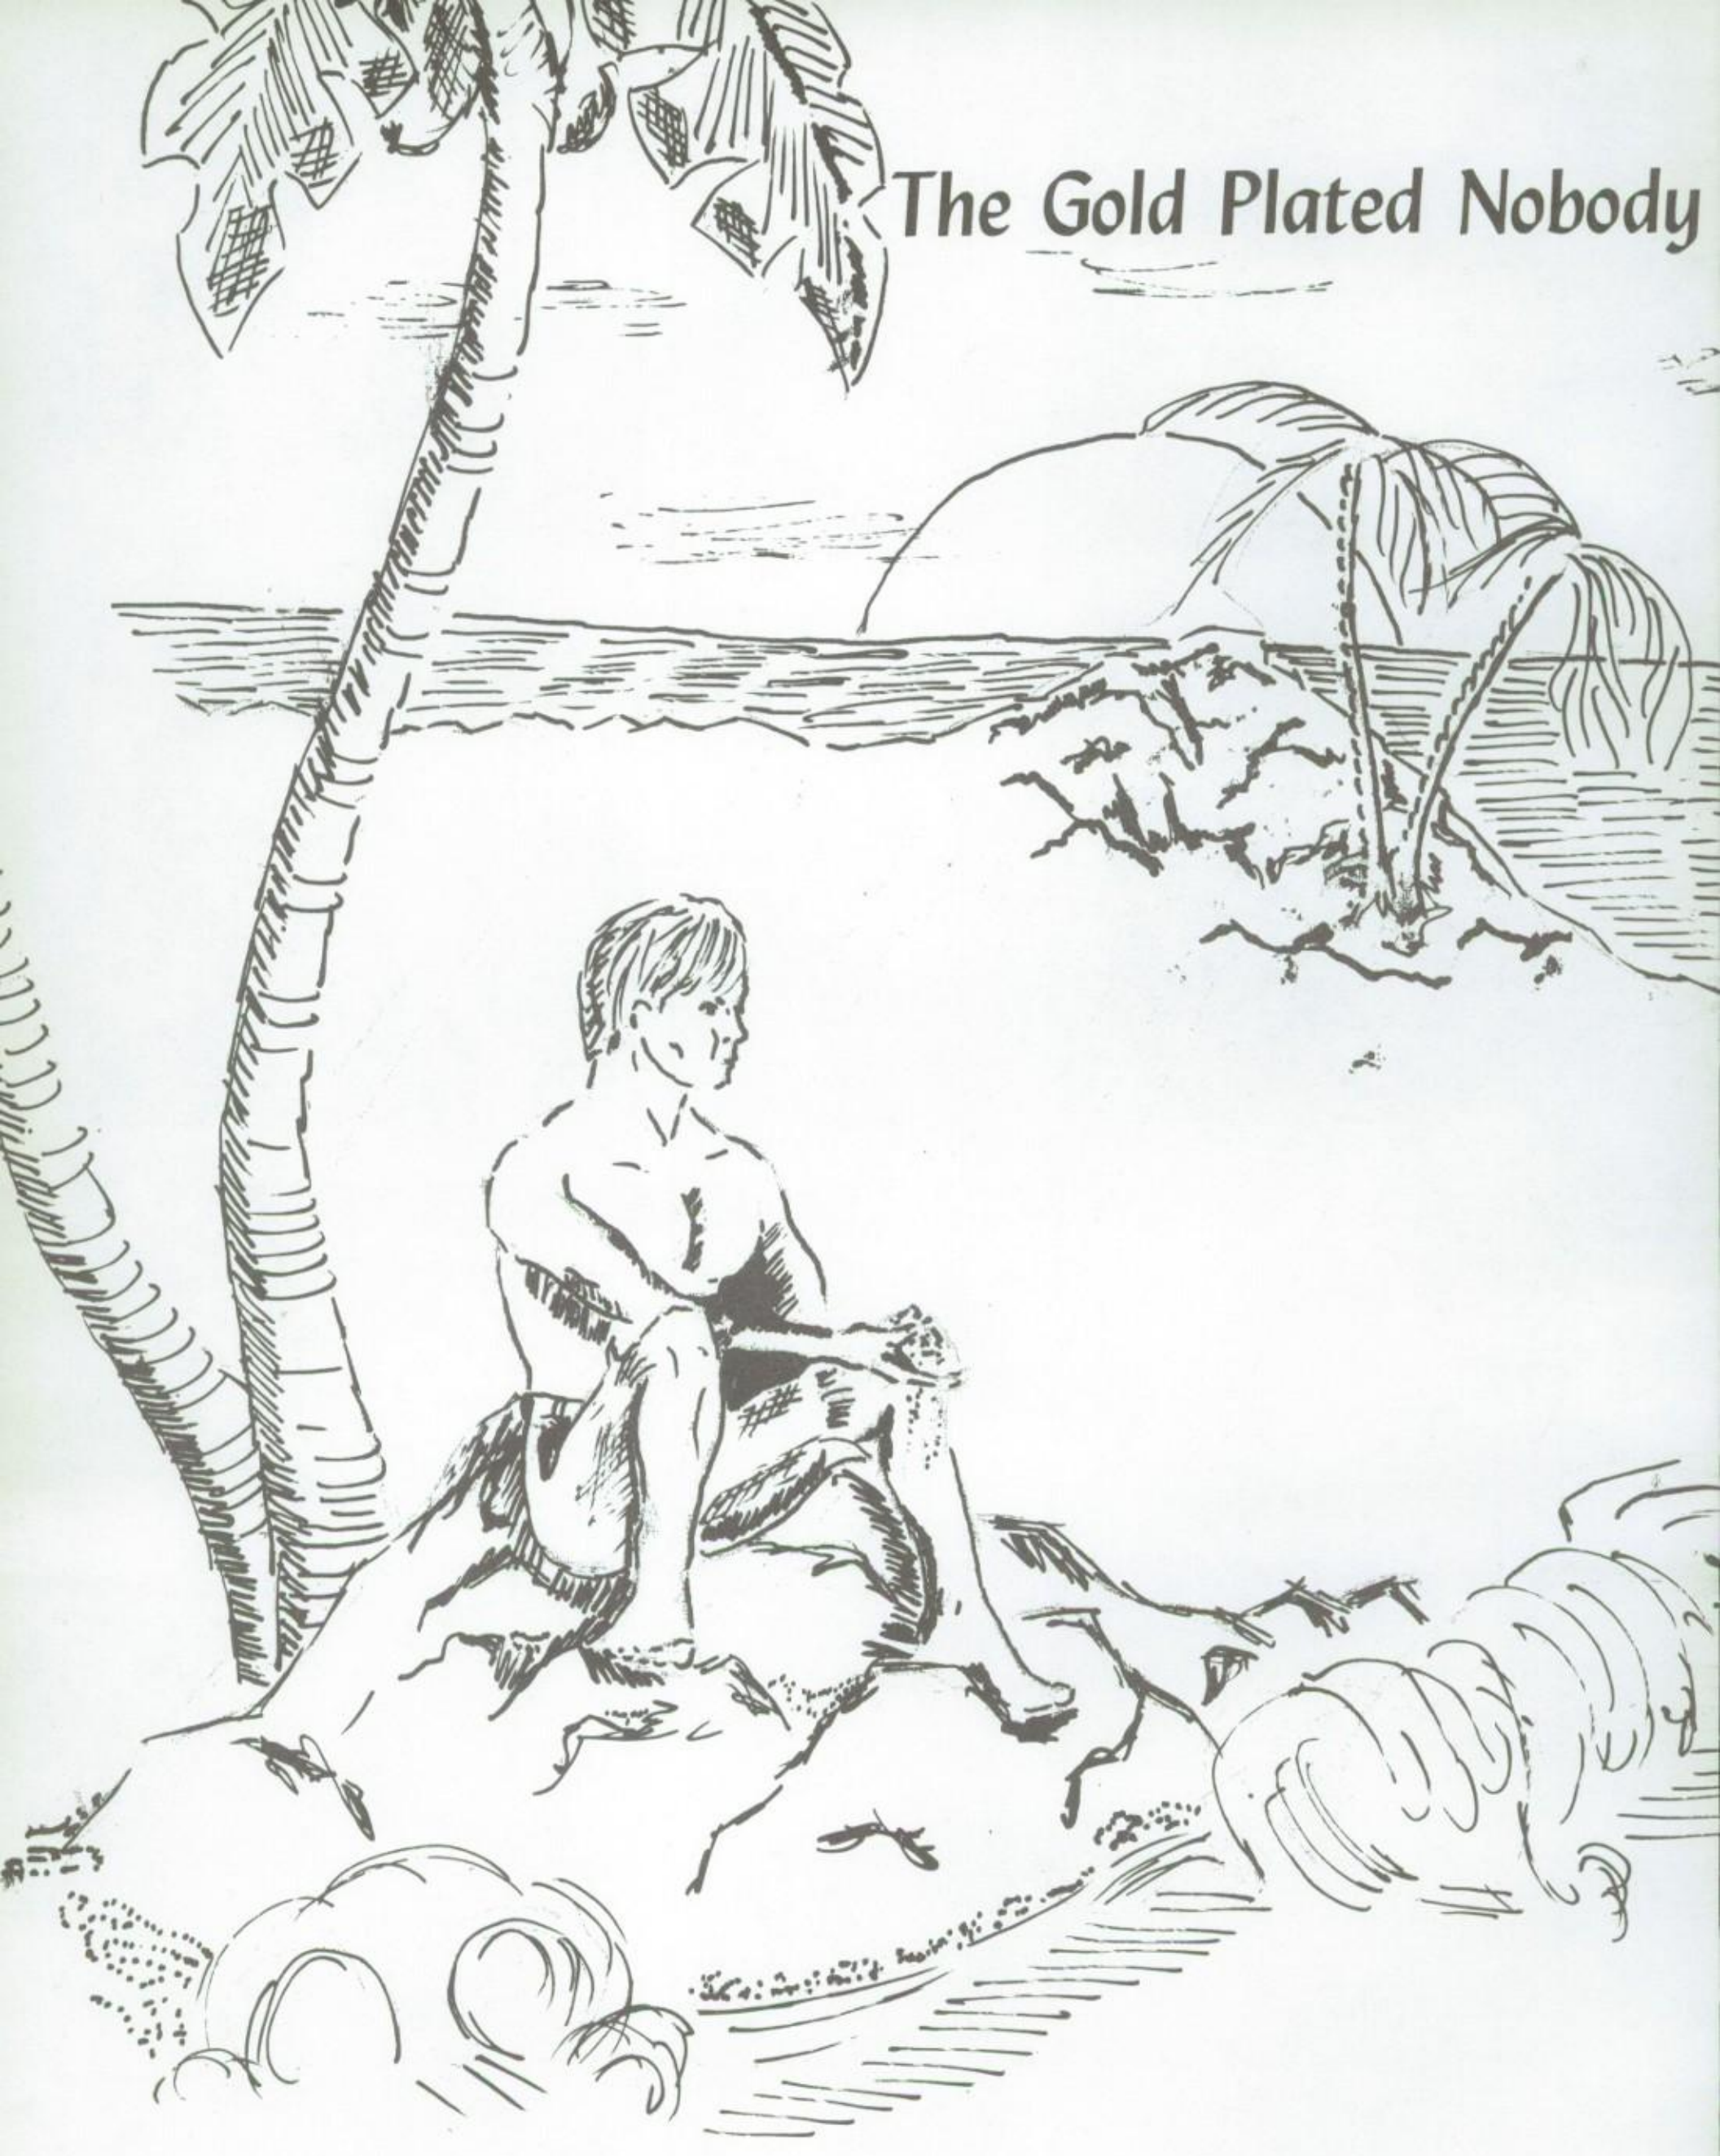
The Gold Plated Nobody



Now I am alone

Alone with myself

And I wonder

Where I went wrong

That I would wind up here

Here in my own private hell

With the torments

Of a thousand nightmares

Running through my brain

And I cry

Cry because I now know

That I am damned

And I seek rest

But there is no rest

As my life dwindles

Through my fingers

Into a pool of nothingness

I have ventured nothing

I have gained nothing

And so shall I die

A small and cheap nobody

Alone and tired

And I cry

There is awareness in a moment, a knowing that you have something to give now that no one will ever have again.

Everyone has a moment to give the world.
If we become too passive, life will go on without us.
If we become too active, we leave life in the dust.

I, The Judge, The Jury, The Fool.

I stand before you naked

Of all my false fronts

No lies or stories to cover

My wretched and twisted body

Once before I stood here

And in my arrogant fury

Brought forth the ugly scars

That blemish man

True your faults are many

But mine are ugly

And twice as numerous

And yet I had deemed it necessary

To damn you for your false faces

While I wore that of an angels

Now my mask is removed

So that you may see

The cripple that judged you

So that you may see me as I am

I sat on my throne

And was all too ready

To hurl the blackest of insults

And the ugliest of curses

Down upon you for your sins

And I played God

But did any God have

As many faults as I

A man is entitled to his mistakes

But mine are too grievous

To ask forgiveness

Instead I ask only

That I may walk this land

With my sins all showing

That no other man

May make my mistakes

And be a fool such as I

And leave the right to judge man

To the God that made him

And not to his fellow man

The future holds a million moments

Each moment will be

The fulfillment of a dream

I've yet to dream

A person I've yet to meet,

A place I've yet to see.

Life is a surprise package that is given to man on his birthday,

but, somehow,

is never quite what he anticipates.

We remember moments, live moments, and anticipate moments.

A Problem

Behind locked doors I hide. Away from the ugliness of the hatred and snickers. Pretending – I live alone and dream of visions pleasing to my eyes while tormenting myself for not allowing these dreams to take root and grow. I stay hidden, within, unable to express my wants, my joyous feelings. Afraid to open those doors, which lead to realism – I remain unknown, caught in a struggle of mind. An overwhelming web of threads. I cry out for help, but no one aids me. For who can come while this locked door remains shut and closed to the awaiting outside. Who will come if I'm unable to be heard?

The reality of life is that it begins to end — triumphantly.

Dreaming of moments, instead of living them, is to fill your head with empty might-have-beens.

Each is a moment;
each cannot last;
man reaches for present moments only to find the past
...in gratitude.

To Be Young

Free as the wind on the mountain, confined as the mountain to the earth.
Vigorous in strife, bored with life – not knowing where to turn.

Grasping still for knowledge yet don't they know it all?
Thinking about the future while wishing for the past.

In love one week,
    and out the next.
Liking all, hating all, fighting all, ignoring all.

A special role to play on the stage of life.
Unknowing as a child but like an adult moaning to be free.

Like a Botticelli angel with large, expecting eyes.
Wondering what life will bring tomorrow and the next.

Looking to the world to show its abilities unfolding.
To guide them to the right, never once astray.

Feeling quite incapable in looks,
in mind, in heart, While sometimes beauty and greatness belong solely to you.

Dependent on no one-needing everyone.
Quizzical to what's going on yet what's the difference really?

Sophisticated, shy, genial or aloof.
Any act is fine but never be yourself.

Developing their own interests and losing them as fast.
Ignoring rules of conformity just following the crowd.

Loving, laughing, weeping, yearning to be free.
Loving, laughing, weeping, how great to be secure . . . .

This is to be young.

Sandy. If you ever go back to Lt.
don't forget me.
Cause I'm going with ya.

Love Ya
